

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am reaching out to express my strong interest in joining your team as a Junior Frontend Developer, even though I could not find a specific open position matching my profile at the moment. I wanted to introduce myself directly, as I believe my background and motivation could be a good fit for your team when the right opportunity arises.

My path into software development is not a conventional one. I completed a full vocational qualification (IHK) in Germany — in a second language and a new professional system — which taught me discipline, reliability, and the ability to work to a high standard under real pressure. Alongside that, I have been building a solid foundation in frontend development on my own initiative: through the JavaScript Frontend Developer course at Rolling Scopes School and consistent self-study, I have gained practical experience in JavaScript (ES6+), HTML5, CSS3/SCSS, REST API integration, and basic Node.js concepts, and I have completed several hands-on projects applying these skills.

I also work with modern AI-assisted development tools such as Claude Code, which helps me explore unfamiliar code faster and stay disciplined about code quality — while still fully understanding and being able to explain and adapt everything I write.

What drives me is a genuine, sustained interest in building real, user-facing applications and continuously growing as a developer — this is not a passing curiosity but a deliberate career change I have been actively working toward for some time. I am reliable, a fast learner, and comfortable working closely with a team, and I would bring the same commitment to a development role that I already proved by completing a demanding professional training in a new country and language.

I would very much welcome the opportunity to introduce myself further and discuss how I could contribute to your team, now or as suitable positions open up.
Thank you for considering my application.

Best regards,
